Centennial of Auburn Women Scholarship Fund Established

In recognition of the 100th anniversary of the admission of women to Auburn University, the women honored at the centennial celebration last fall have established a scholarship fund.

Pat Barnes '65, vice president for student affairs at Auburn, who chaired the planning committee for the celebration, said, "many of the honorees felt that something permanent should be done to mark the occasion and recommended this idea to the university administration. We considered a number of options, but we always came back to the idea of a scholarship fund. We wanted something that would honor all women who have attended Auburn.

"Scholarships are greatly needed at Auburn, where we lag significantly behind other universities in both the number and size of scholarships available," said Barnes. "A scholarship endowment fund which would last in perpetuity, and, at the same time, enable young women of exceptional ability to attend Auburn seemed to us to be the perfect lasting and living commemoration of the Centennial of Women." To date, 38 honorees have made pledges or gifts to the scholarship fund. "We asked the honorees to launch the scholarship fund and we hope that all the honorees will participate," said Barnes. "However, we don't want to limit the donors to the honorees. We'd like to see husbands and children honor their Auburn wives and mothers or other relatives with gifts to the fund. And we'd like to see other Auburn men and women make gifts to the fund in honor of the Auburn women in their lives."

The first goal for the Centennial of Women Scholarship Fund is a $25,000 endowment. "With such an endowment we can give a scholarship annually to a deserving Auburn woman student. This (Continued on page 2)

DANCING THE KNIGHT AWAY—Curtis I. Eatman '43 and his wife, Betty, were among the more than 300 Auburn alumni and friends who returned to campus recently for the 1993 Golden Eagles Reunion, honoring the class of 1943. Among the weekend's many activities were a reception at the President's home, a 35-24 Tiger win over Southern Mississippi, induction of the members of the class of '43 as official Golden Eagles, and a dance with tunes provided by the ever-popular Auburn Knights. Money Magazine Ranks AU 19th in Newest Survey of Top 100 U.S. College Values

Auburn was ranked 19th among the nation's public colleges and universities in Money magazine's annual rating of the Top 100 college buys in American education.

AU, which ranked 27th overall, was the only public college or university in Alabama to rank in the 1994 version of Money Guide: Best College Buys Top 100. Privately funded Samford University in Birmingham ranked 38th.

This ranking reflects not just value, but quality as well," said AU President William V. Muse. "It's indicative of our outstanding faculty and the top flight students we attract."

Auburn was also recognized in other specialty ratings. The university was ranked sixth best among public colleges and universities in the Southeast and seventh in the nation among public schools when only in-state tuition is considered.

All gifts are tax deductible. A list of those contributing to the scholarship fund as well as those honored by contributions will be kept with the permanent records of the endowment.

rated 34th nationally, while AU ranked fourth nationally in its ability to attract out-of-state students, who pay triple the in-state tuition rates.

Money evaluated more than 1,000 colleges and universities in compiling their list of the 100 best values. Factors used to determine the listed schools included faculty resources, core faculty, library resources, teaching budget, entrance exam scores, freshman retention and graduation rates, number of graduates who earn doctorates, and alumni business success.

Schneller New Dean of Sciences & Math

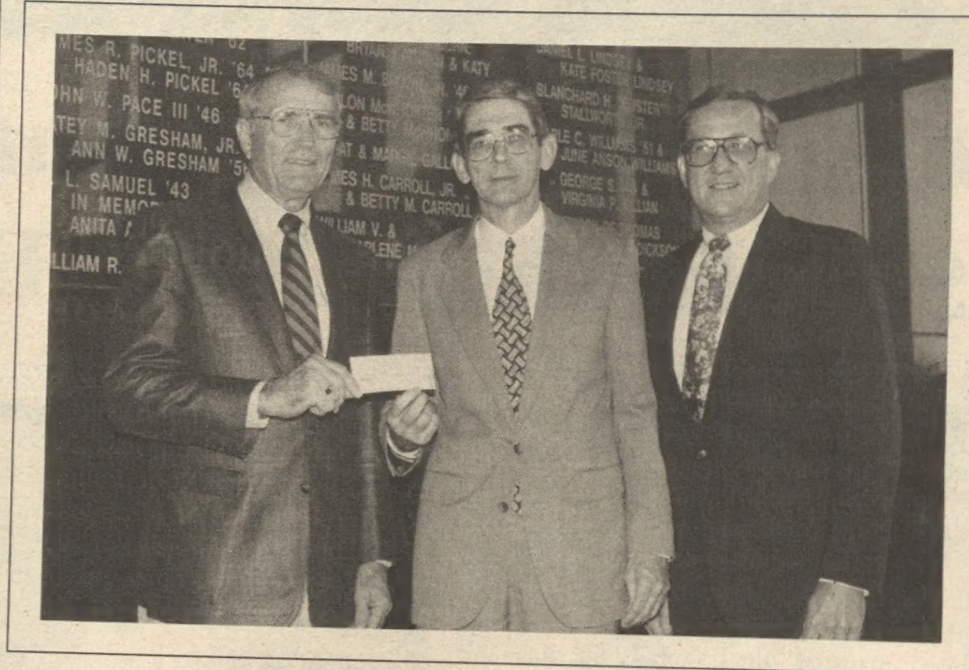

Stewart W. Schneller, professor and head of the Department of Chemistry at the University of South Florida, has been named dean of Auburn's College of Sciences and Mathematics. He will assume the post in spring 1994.

Schneller, who has taught on USF's chemistry faculty since 1971, has conducted more than $2 million in funded research and authored numerous publications and papers, primarily focusing on biotechnology. He guided an undergraduate program at USF which has been ranked as high as seventh among U.S. universities in the number of degrees awarded.

A University of Louisville graduate, Schneller received his Ph.D. from Indiana University and did postdoctoral work at Stanford University and the University of Massachusetts.

Rebecca Killough, a chemical engineering student, is studying in Spain; Dao Pahm, also in chemical engineering, is studying in England; Juan Moya, of mechanical engineering, is studying in Indonesia; and Alan Warfield, a civil engineering student, is studying in France.

Eligible students must be enrolled in the College of Engineering, maintain at least a 3.0 grade point average, and have at least three full quarters of study remaining after returning to AU. Auburn awarded the first Birdsong scholarships in 1990. To date, 16 students have participated, studying in locations including Germany, Austria, Italy, and Russia.

Professor Receives Humboldt Award

Auburn plant pathologist Rodrigo Rodriguez-Kabana, a member of the AU faculty since 1965, recently traveled to Bonn, Germany, to receive a 1993 Humboldt Foundation Senior Research Award for his career achievements in battling soil nematodes. The award, one of only 50 given globally each year by the German-based foundation, recognizes academic achievement and brings together some of the world's top scientists and researchers.

Rodriguez-Kabana will spend two months in Germany this fall, lecturing and conducting research with top German plant pathologists. He will also visit several agricultural research centers and make contacts for possible future collaboration.

In 1992, Rodriguez-Kabana received a Fulbright Senior Research Award, which allowed him to spend several months at Spain's Cabrils Institution. While there, he worked with Spanish scientists to find possible solutions to one of that nation's most pressing agricultural problems—the disposal of large numbers of olives from which olive oil has been extracted.

Funding Received for 10th Eminent Scholar

Auburn recently received state matching money for its 10th Eminent Scholar chair—this one funded by Texas billionaire and 1992 presidential candidate Ross Perot and named for an Auburn alumnus who is one of his business associates. The Thomas Walter Chair in Technology Management, funded by the Perot Foundation in 1989, honors AU engineering graduate Tom Walter '55.

AU Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Paul Parks '56 said a search committee will be appointed shortly to begin screening applicants for the Walter Chair. Auburn already has eight Eminent Scholars on campus, and the university also has commitments for several additional chairs. AU will certify these positions with the Alabama Commission on Higher Education once the private support is secured.

Auburn's New Collegiate Tag: Questions and Answers

Auburn's newly designed License to Learn collegiate tag made its official debut October 1, and is now available at probate judges' offices across Alabama. Following are answers to some of the most common questions called in to the Alumni Association's License to Learn hotline (205) 844-1183, set up to provide assistance to Auburn alumni and friends interested in the tags.

Q: I want to get a new tag prior to my regular renewal date. What do I do?

A: New Auburn tags may be picked up before a person's regular renewal date for a $1.25 issuance fee if you already have an AU tag, or $51.25 if you have a regular Alabama tag. If your current tag is still valid, you must bring it along with your tag receipt to change to a new AU tag. For those trading in an old AU tag, the $50 scholarship gift will then be payable along with regular tag taxes and fees during the regular renewal month.

Q: If I already have a collegiate tag with a number, etc. I would like to keep, how do I go about making sure that I get a new tag with the same thing on it?

A: Those wanting a specific number, etc., even if they have that designation already, must go to the probate office and request the designation on the new tag.

Q: Can I get an Auburn tag if I live out-of-state?

A: No, in most cases state law requires that persons buying Alabama license plates have a current Alabama address. There are certain exceptions available for military personnel, however. Contact your local probate office for details.

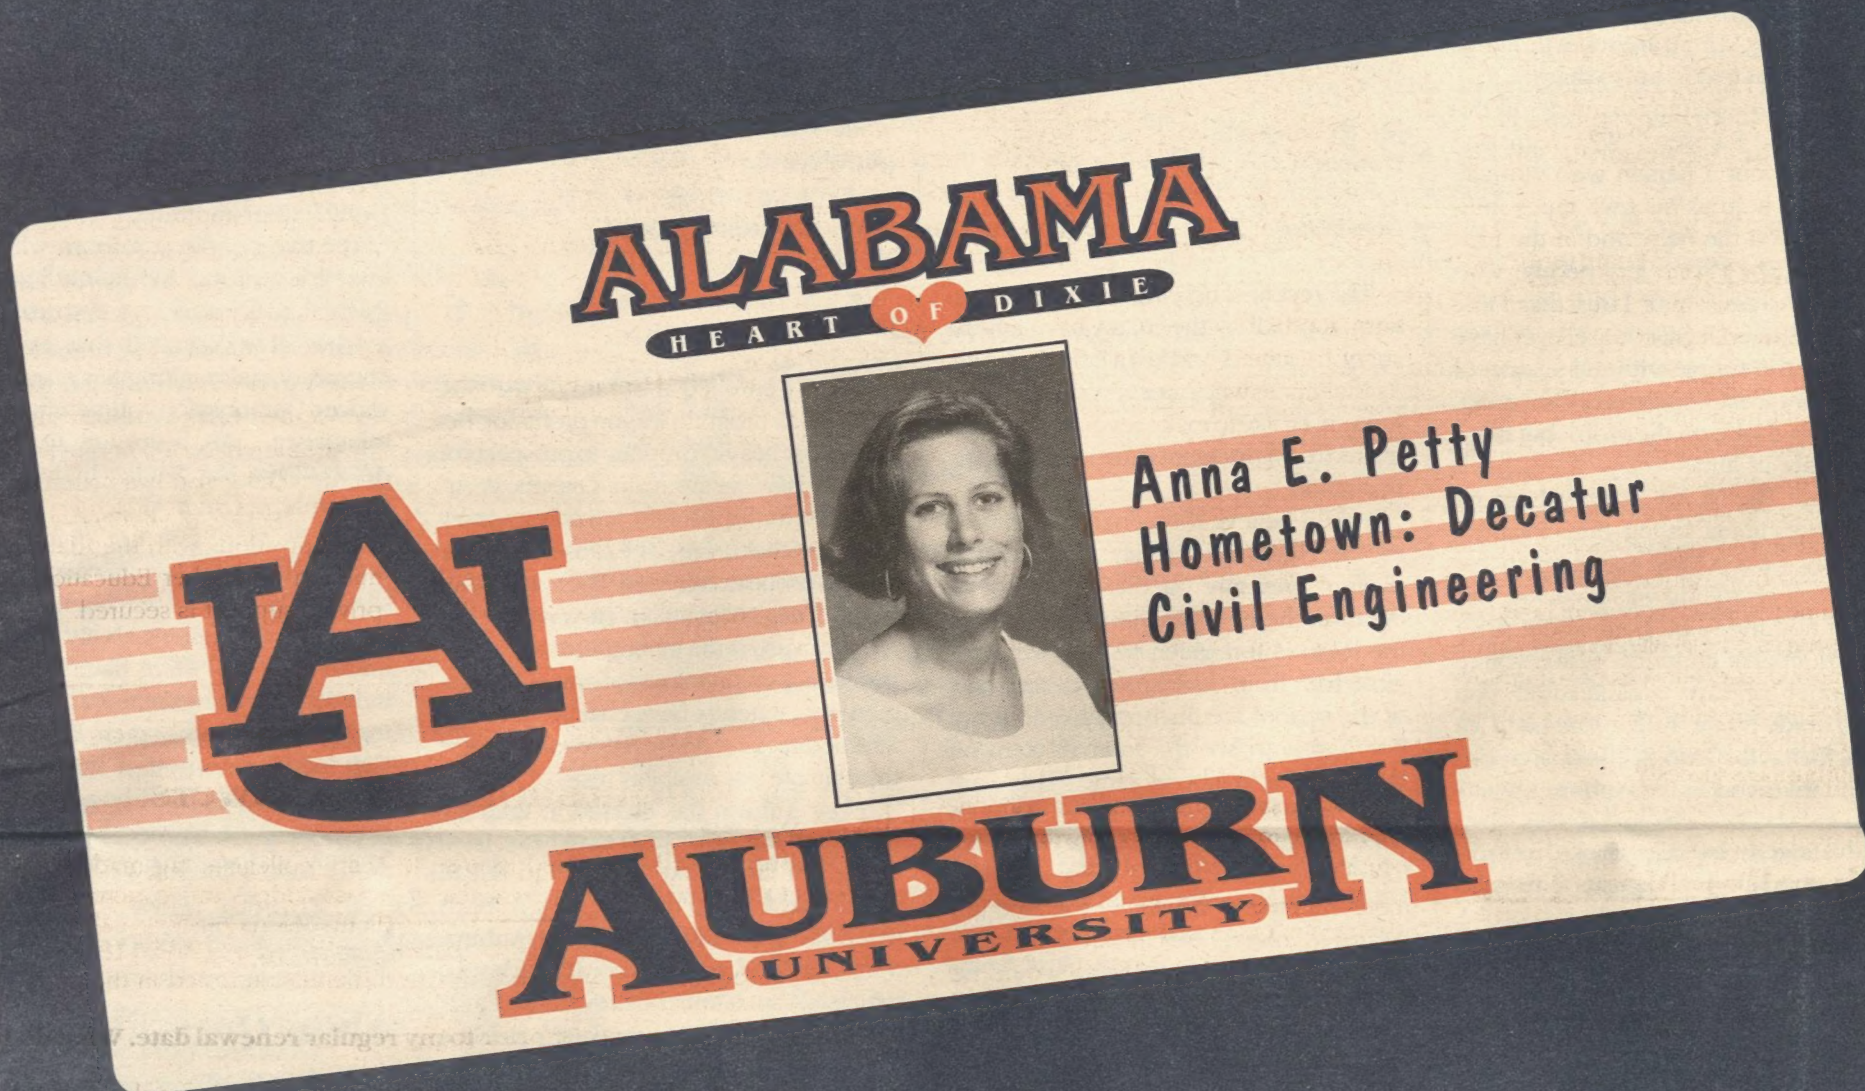

Q: I want a vanity tag when the new tags come out. When can I go to my probate office and order it?

A: Orders for vanity tags can be placed any time. Messages are limited to five characters, which may be any combination of letters or numbers as long as there is no identical combination already existing. Delivery takes four to six weeks.

Q: Where does the money from my tag purchase go?

A: More than 97 percent—or $48.75—of the $50 fee for the tag goes to a scholarship endowment that helps bring outstanding in-state students to Auburn. Since the collegiate tag program was introduced in 1988, the AU endowment has grown to more than $1.7 million, and it is funding more than 30 scholarships this fall.

Auburn's Roads Scholars

Outstanding Alabama students are attending Auburn on License to Learn Scholarships. More than 97 percent of the cost of your AU tag purchase goes to a scholarship endowment to help bring some of the state's top students to the plains. For more information on how to get your tag, call the License to Learn Hotline at (205) 844-1183!

NCAA Probation Cause for Anger

Dear Editor,

Aug. 19, 1993: the day after the NCAA handed down its decision. As it is for all Auburn folk, this is a painful time for me; but this thing has been a slow pain for the past two years. There are some thoughts and reflections that I want to share.

First is of the leading character in this tragedy...Eric Ramsey. What can one conclude about a person who virtually begged for help as his own tapes indicate, received the help, and in the process "entrapped" the very people who consented to assist him? I trust that if Eric or his celebrated legal counsel ever have to deal in the future with the subject of entrapment from the victim's viewpoint, they won't choke on the word; but that's enough about him.

Second: The NCAA. Did Auburn receive punishment fitting the violation? Not really. Others have gotten much less even when recruiting was involved, but there is nothing to be done about this.

Third: ethical conduct. When you're a member of any organization, you should abide by the rules. The need for ethical behavior among those supporting and involved in the Auburn athletic program would seem to be very clear from this tragedy; but, alas, all one has to do is pick up the daily newspaper or turn on the evening news to know that ethics is not one of the strong points in our society today. Appealing to ethics is obviously not going to stroke a responsive chord with many in today's society.

Fourth: Was Eric Ramsey worth it? Facing two years probation, one year loss of television, and six scholarships over three years...all in the midst of a rebuilding program with a new coach and staff, one must ask the obvious question...Was Eric Ramsey worth it? Let's total up the cost. Several score of young players on the Auburn football team who, through no fault of their own, won't have an opportunity to play on a championship team or in a bowl for the next two years...some never; no television for a year; many countless alumni and fans who will be short-changed in their aspirations for the Auburn they love; the black eye that will affect recruiting for years to come; the loss of revenue...the cost of the investigation and loss of bowl and television money estimated at $3-$4 million; and finally a possible movie depiction of Eric being persecuted by the Auburn "football plantation system."

The bottom line of all this is to appeal to Auburn folk everywhere to ask the "bottom line" question if they are tempted to violate the rules: Is it worth another Eric Ramsey? Don't be misled; there are other potential "Eric Ramseys" out there. I'm sure if those involved could have looked beyond the seemingly innocent eyes of a young man and had seen the Eric Ramsey we know today, they would have answered his pleas for help with an emphatic NO; but they didn't because they couldn't see that behind those eyes was not gratitude, but entrapment.

The bottom line? Is another "Eric Ramsey" worth risking further athletic bankruptcy for Auburn? I believe not and if we all ask this question before we act, whatever our motivation might be, Auburn will be much better off for it.

Dear Editor,

The recent sanctions imposed on Auburn football by the NCAA have left me angry, frustrated, and just a little confused. As an alumnus who cares very deeply about Auburn, I'd like to make several comments related to this incident in order to vent my frustration.

First, I believe the penalties imposed by the NCAA are grossly unfair to the players presently on the team, not to mention the new coaching staff. While the team is forbidden to reap any tangible fruit from their labors, decent fans of the school are also penalized by not being able to see the football team on television or in a bowl game. These are players and fans who had nothing to do with violations that apparently occurred. It seems to me that punishment would be more effective if it actually touched the parties involved. For instance, coaches involved in any wrongdoing would be suspended from coaching an NCAA member school for a period of time commensurate with the severity of the violation. A booster illegally providing gifts to players would be banned from all involvement with the team for a certain period of time. Finally, a player found guilty of accepting benefits would be suspended from play and also be required to pay back what he had received.

I believe this would be a more equitable means of punishment and would prevent innocent people from suffering while the offenders run free. It is particularly appalling to me that Pat Dye is able to draw a $750,000-a-year salary from the university while the Athletic Department will probably operate in the red for the next few years. Also, everyone's favorite malcontent, Eric Ramsey, was able to ask for and pocket money and gifts in knowing violation of the rules and he received no punishment. The least that should be done is a tax audit by the IRS, since I'm sure it was not reported on his tax returns. Indeed if he even filed.

Secondly, it is obvious to any thinking person that the NCAA is a severely flawed organization which metes out punishment erratically. Auburn has the unfortunate distinction of belonging to what I call "The Club." This is an organization whose members are singled out for scrutiny and harassment by the NCAA. Members include Clemson, Oklahoma State, Texas A&M, and several others.

I'm proud to say I'm a graduate of Auburn and I try to support the school in any way I can. I attend every football game and practically all home basketball and baseball games.

What angers me so much is that I, and others like me, are penalized and embarrassed while violators who care nothing at all for Auburn run free and easy. In addition, it appears that Auburn is receiving inequitable punishment by the NCAA while other schools receive little or no punishment.

Dear Editor,

When I enrolled at Auburn in the '50s, the football program was on probation because coaches gave money to prospects or players. Here we are again. Over the years, probation has happened repeatedly, and now includes other sports. The cause is obvious and has not been corrected. The reaction has been, "They got us again. How unfair."

The cause is the incompetence, negligence, lack of control, win-at-any-price mentality that extends from coaches through athletic directors—to the presidents—where the ultimate responsibility rests.

Now Auburn has elected to take TV probation this year rather than next. In so doing, Auburn broke its word to ESPN, which had to drop the Ole Miss/Auburn game and show Pittsburgh/USM. Auburn hurt Ole Miss and all the SEC schools, which lost substantial TV revenues. ESPN lost, because their game wasn't as big a draw. How much will ESPN desire to put Auburn on TV next year? Also, Alabama/Auburn will not be on TV. So the SEC schools lose again. Auburn had TV commitments for these games. Does anyone feel these actions will help the SEC or Auburn in their relationships?

I have been a dues-paying and contributing alumnus since graduation and believe most alumni are disgusted with the sorry leadership that Auburn has had to let this probation happen. The new football coach presents a ray of hope, but I feel no such confidence in the athletic director or president because of this TV decision.

If this EVER happens again, EVERYONE must go—coaches, A.D., and president. Not to be put on retainers—FIRED. Along with them, the trustees and directors who hire them should resign. We must clear out those who are not intelligent enough or do not care enough to exercise control and leadership in Auburn's best interests.

Auburn's greatness is the greatness of our people, our students, our alumni, our teachers, our staff, our traditions, and our supporters.

We must stand together and say, "We are Auburn. Never again."

Siddons Feature Brings Memories

Dear Editor,

I enjoyed reading the interview with Anne Rivers Siddons '58 in the July-August issue of the Alumnews. I don't believe that she and I ever met at Auburn, but I fondly remember her column, "The Passing Stream," in The Plainsman, and I have been gratified by her success as a novelist.

I think, though, that she erred at one point—when she named "Dr. Ruth Faulk...an extraordinary teacher" as one of the two people at Auburn who influenced her most. I certainly agree that Ruth Faulk was an extraordinary teacher—I recognized that even as a chemistry major taking her required Advanced Composition course with decided reluctance. But, according to the 1958 API Bulletin, Mrs. Faulk's highest degree was an M.A. (from API).

My point is that not only research accomplishments but also the number of advanced degrees a teacher has are irrelevant to the teacher's ability and lasting influence. Yes, there have been a few individuals who excelled at both teaching and research, such as Auburn's Gennady Kosolapoff, a world-class research chemist. But I hope there is still room at Auburn for those who are "merely" extraordinary teachers.

Alum Questions Athletic Equality

Dear Editor,

I was somewhat irritated by the column "Athletics and Equality" (June 1993). I disagree that from 1972 to 1993 is a relatively short time to accomplish what AU has accomplished in complying with Title IX guidelines. Relative to what? If a new football program took that long to be successful I think it would be considered a joke. Negative comments about the Athletic Department are hardly belittling to successful individuals such as Joanna Davenport and Joe Ciampi. Many people have excelled while playing for losing teams and yet that doesn't take away from or belittle their accomplishments as individuals. On the other hand, their accomplishments do not make their teams winners and thus I believe Auburn has not been a winner in complying. I don't feel most people are underestimating the progress made to date, rather I feel they are expressing that the progress is not as good as it could or should be.

You comment that "...the university has also set a precedent that the nine other SEC schools lacking the sport will likely soon follow." Will they "likely" (Continued on p. 22)

The Auburn Creed Revisited

By Mike Jernigan '80

One of Auburn's most revered sons, George Petrie, must have had a premonition when he penned the Auburn Creed so long ago. For, in it, in words simple, yet eloquent, the man who founded Auburn's football team and served as its first coach wrote: "I believe in honesty and truthfulness, without which I cannot win the respect and confidence of my fellow men. I believe in a sound mind in a sound body and a spirit that is not afraid, and in clean sports that develop these qualities....And because Auburn men and women believe in these things, I believe in Auburn and love it."

Were he still alive today, Petrie would have no doubt still loved Auburn on August 18, when an embarrassed President William V. Muse had to get up before a national press conference and announce Auburn's sixth NCAA probation—this time for numerous violations in the Tiger football program. But he would have also likely been angered, disgusted, and deeply saddened by the continuing pattern of abuses and disdain of the rules exhibited by some Auburn boosters and coaches.

The latest penalties gave Auburn the dubious distinction of becoming only the third university in NCAA history to have been placed on probation six or more times by the policing organization of college athletics. As if that weren't bad enough, the majority of the penalties won't officially take effect until November 23, when Auburn's two-year probation period for basketball and tennis recruiting violations comes to an end, although AU began serving its one-year television ban at the beginning of the current season.

In its 18-page report outlining the Auburn case, the NCAA noted damningly that the "violations of NCAA rules that were committed at Auburn University are indicative of what can occur when, in the minds of members of a university's athletics department staff and representatives of its athletic interests, the athletics program becomes more important than the university of which it is a part."

Were it not for the decisive actions of Muse in separating the positions of athletic director and head football coach, hiring a new AD and coach with excellent NCAA records, and in making crystal clear Auburn's intention to play by the rules in the future, said NCAA Committee on Infractions Chairman David Swank, the penalties would have been even more severe. For, make no mistake, the violations were major in nature.

In his remarks to the press, Muse was painfully frank. "It cannot be overlooked and should not be forgotten," he noted, "that this is a dark day not only for our football program, but for Auburn University as an institution of higher learning. An institution, as does an individual, has to manage its affairs in a proper manner. Auburn, as this report clearly indicates, has not done that....If this program is to survive, there can be no more days like this one, intentional or unintentional."

That last statement is one which every Auburn alumnus and friend should take to heart. It's easy in the wake of such events to make excuses, and far too many have been willing to do so.

"Everybody else does it, so why shouldn't we?" "The NCAA has it in for us." "Eric Ramsey shouldn't have bit the hand that fed him." "We were only trying to help the kid feed his family. Is that so bad?" We've all heard those excuses and more in the last two years, as the NCAA pondered our fate. But the real truth—as hard as it may be to swallow—is that we have no one to blame but ourselves.

Muse made it clear that, at least during his watch, there will be no more excuses. And that should be the resolution of the rest of us as well. In the future, we must hold our athletic leadership—and ourselves as fans—to a higher standard than that we've been willing to accept in the past. We must quit deifying coaches and players and placing them on unreachable pedestals, and make them more accountable for their actions.

In the current case, those who will suffer the most are those with the least guilt—the juniors and seniors who will never go to a bowl game, the fans who won't be able to watch the Tigers on TV, the new coaches and staff who will still be expected to win despite recruiting and image handicaps that will place them at a competitive disadvantage with their SEC counterparts for years to come.

In the future, we should resolve that such will not be the case. President Muse made it clear to all those listening that future rules violations will not be acceptable. That's something we should all be able to agree upon. But we, as Auburn alumni and friends who cherish both this institution and its athletic program, should go a step further.

Let's make it equally clear to current and future coaches, administrators, and boosters alike that we will no longer tolerate those who do not play by the rules. Let's make retribution for failing to do so—in the form of immediate dismissal or disassociation—swift and sure. And let's take control of our athletic program once and for all, so that we'll never again have to hang our heads in embarrassment and shame, or make lame excuses while the NCAA announces our fate.

George Petrie would expect no less. Neither should the rest of us. AA

Playing By the Rules

By President William V. Muse

Over the past year and a half that I have served as president of Auburn, I have traveled throughout Alabama and other states to attend various functions. In each of those locations I have met numerous Auburn alumni of all ages, shapes, and sizes.

The thing that has been most impressive to me is the love that individual alumni have for this university. The loyalty is deep and it is genuine. That is the best exemplification that I can identify of that quality we call "the Auburn spirit."

The Auburn spirit is truly one of our greatest assets. It binds us together as a family and it motivates us to do those things—whether it is contributing our time and talent, our money, or preferably both—to help Auburn become stronger and better.

I think we need to do all that we can to continue to develop the Auburn spirit. And we need to continue to nurture it among our graduates. For example, we are looking at a proposal for an enhanced orientation system, something we are calling "Camp War Eagle," that would help pass the Auburn spirit on to incoming freshmen.

I am hopeful that we will find increasing opportunities for alumni involvement—on committees, councils, and boards, and in the Alumni Association. For example, I would like to see us achieve a goal of being number one in the nation among public universities in terms of the percentage of our alumni who pay dues. And when we launch a major capital campaign, I hope that we will be able to count on record numbers of alumni contributing, in whatever way they can, to this effort.

There is one area, however, where the love and loyalty of our alumni needs to be carefully channeled. That is in the area of athletics. There is no activity of the university that generates the kind of publicity and has the level of visibility as does our intercollegiate athletics program, particularly our football program. And there is no area of the university's endeavors that generates the level of alumni participation as does athletics.

Everyone wants our teams to be successful; we want them to win. That is understandable, because when Auburn competes in intercollegiate athletics, that team represents all of us who are currently at Auburn and all of those who are a part of the broader Auburn family. It hurts when we lose, because a part of us has failed. But we must keep both the wins and the losses in perspective.

I want all of Auburn's teams to achieve their goals. I want them to win. That is why we play the games and that is why they keep score. But winning is not everything, either in life or in sports. It is important that we play the game by the rules and that we learn to play it better than our opponent.

That lesson has become clear to the Auburn family in a very painful way recently. For the sixth time in our history, Auburn has been placed on NCAA probation. Only two other schools have achieved such notoriety. That is a reputation that a school of the academic quality that Auburn possesses should not have.

The most important reason for Auburn's existence and the value for which it has stood for over 136 years is the development of men and women who are capable of playing a meaningful role in our society. Auburn's reputation for academic excellence should be bolstered by the visibility generated by a successful athletic program, not weakened by an image that athletics is more important than academics and that a "winning-at-all-costs" attitude prevails.

The current NCAA probation will be very costly to Auburn—over $2 million in lost revenue or expenses. But it will be equally costly to us in terms of what others think about Auburn—an employer considering hiring a graduate of Auburn, a prospective student determining what university to attend, or a foundation debating about whether to make a grant. All of us need to work to make sure that the costs are minimized.

A major thing that we need to do is to ensure that we do not repeat the mistakes from the past. We cannot afford any more violations in our athletics program. Any major violations during the next five years will subject our football program to the death penalty. No amount of potential short-term gain can be worth the long-term anguish that the death penalty would bring to our athletic program and to our university.

Our current probation was produced in part by alumni and athletic supporters trying to "help" the university. Their motives may have been humanitarian. They may have been motivated by a strong love for the university and a desire to see it succeed. But, regardless of the motive, giving money or any other benefit to an athlete is a violation of NCAA rules. Each alumnus must be knowledgeable as to what is permissible and must adhere to those rules. We must expect and insist on nothing less. If you truly love your university we must have a commitment—both within and without—to comply with the rules.

The NCAA report contained a couple of very significant comments. It said "the Auburn case is a very unfortunate one. It is...indicative of what can occur when, in the minds of members of a university's athletic department staff and representatives of its athletic interests, the athletic program becomes more important than the university of which it is a part." It also contended that "there was an attitude on the part of some representatives of the university's athletic interests that NCAA rules could be ignored and violated with impunity."

I don't think those attitudes exist any longer at Auburn. Our coaches are strongly committed to operating a program within the rules. But we must have the full support of all our alumni and friends. We want you to be a contributor to the Greater Auburn Fund or be a scholarship donor. That is a very tangible and legitimate way in which you can show your support for Auburn University and its athletic program. And we want you to attend the games and participate in all of the supporting activities. But don't provide any benefits to individual athletes that are not generally available to all members of the student body. Don't put the very existence of our athletic program in jeopardy. It is too important to us for that to happen.

I love Auburn. And I know that you do, too. Let's work together to build a university and an athletic program that are fully supportive of the goals we want to attain. AA

MCDONALD'S, BARKLEY TEAM UP—The Ronald McDonald Children's Charities recently donated $10,000 to a minority scholarship fund established at Auburn by NBA star and former Tiger Charles Barkley. SHADES OF THE SOUTH

BY MIKE JERNIGAN '80

Outside the studio window, a garden spider the size of a child's hand touches up its web, a massive, yet fragile structure draped across the opening's entire width. With infinite patience the insect works, attending to each tiny detail with careful, deliberate precision.

Artist Jack DeLoney '64, watching the spider work as he talks in a sticky South Alabama drawl, shares its penchant for patience. Stricken with polio as an eight-year-old, he learned its value, as well as that of perseverance, during long hours spent bedridden at his grandmother's home. Quarantined from his brother and two sisters because of the dreaded disease, he escaped the bonds of his physical confinement by learning to sketch and draw.

"While I may not be a deeply religious man," DeLoney has said, "I definitely believe in a higher power. And it just might be that polio was God's way of making sure that I got where I am today—doing exactly what I want to do for a living."

The only clue these days to his boyhood trials is an awkward limp, but DeLoney's perseverance and love of art remain. He has turned his childhood avocation into a lucrative business enterprise, the crown jewel of which is the Jack DeLoney Gallery, set in an 85-year-old restored home—which he traded three framed prints for and moved to a prominent location on Highway 231—just outside of Ozark.

His growing reputation as one of the South's premier watercolorists is based primarily on a style which might best be described as Southern rustic—scenes of antiquated agricultural practices such as chopping cotton and drying peanuts in the fields on racks—long ago outmoded by the advent of modern farming machinery. Many of the works are dotted with people and places from his Ozark childhood memories: an old farm home here, a tenant shanty there, or sharecroppers laboring to chop and load cotton under a withering midday sun.

"People often tell me that I'm a chronicler of Southern history as much as anything," reflects DeLoney, who cites Andrew Wyeth and Winslow Homer as artists who have most influenced his own style. "They say they're glad I'm recording some of the old rural South in my paintings, because otherwise it will be lost forever.

"If that happens to be what I'm doing, all well and good," he adds, sprawling comfortably on a sofa amidst the studio's clutter. "I try not to restrict myself solely to those kinds of subjects, and I could probably go to Colorado and paint mountains and aspens just as well. But it is true that my heart is in the South. I'm a regional artist by birth, like it or not."

DeLoney is also well known for his wildlife works—his painting of geese in flight was selected in 1981 as the Alabama Waterfowl Stamp—as well as barnyard scenes, florals, and a wide variety of other nostalgic subjects. And his popularity has spread far beyond the Mason-Dixon line. Originals command anywhere from $15,000 to $40,000 each and are featured in corporate and private collections around the world.

Despite his childhood bent toward art and his subsequent success at it, however, DeLoney never planned his current career. After overcoming his affliction with polio and going on to serve as student body president his senior year in high school, he took an aptitude test at Auburn that set his future course.

"I drew a lot as a child, but I never considered art as a career until my brother and I went up to Auburn to take that test," DeLoney remembers. "I had thought about studying engineering, but after one look at those test results the counselors said no way. They suggested art as a possibility because my scores showed a strong interest in that direction."

DeLoney studied art close to home at Troy State for a year, then transferred to Auburn's art program, where he immediately felt right at home. "Once I got there, I really burned the midnight oil," he says. "And I loved every minute of it. I particularly remember Maltby Sykes' and Hugh Williams' classes, and Richard Kinnaird stands out because he thought I had potential and spent a lot of extra time with me."

Though trained as a commercial artist, DeLoney's first job after graduation was with the Methodist Publishing House in Nashville, working for fellow Auburn alumnus Bob Nance '57 as a book cover designer. On weekends he exhibited his work in local street shows, and it was from those humble beginnings that his lifelong fascination with watercolors began.

"I made a C and a D in my watercolor courses at Auburn, and I probably should have failed," he recalls, eyes twinkling. "I started doing those street shows in Nashville and it was like an addiction for me. I challenged myself to learn to do watercolors right, and pretty soon that's all I was doing."

"I started out painting simple rural subjects from my memory because that was all I knew. My father farmed for a living until I was around 14, and I've spent more than a little time in the cotton fields myself. We also had two families of tenant farmers who lived on our place and helped work the land. As I grew more confident and gained experience, my works became more complex and I began to people them with these friends and acquaintances from my past."

After only a year in Nashville, DeLoney was offered a civil service job as an illustrator at Fort Rucker. Though Ozark seemed an unlikely place for an aspiring young artist, his roots ran deep, and DeLoney returned home to a secure 8-to-5 job he would hold for almost 18 years, working throughout the week, painting at night and on weekends, then packing up and traveling to art shows around the Southeast to sell his increasingly popular works.

"People who invest in art like to meet the artist, and I loved meeting folks one on one," DeLoney says of life on the art show circuit. "Doing those shows was a constant struggle, but that's really where I built my client base."

Living in small-town Ozark was another negative he turned into a plus. "I thought for a while about relocating," he admits. "I could sell more paintings elsewhere, in a bigger market like Birmingham, New Orleans, or Atlanta. But I like living here on land my dad and granddad plowed. It has a kind of continuity that's important to me. So I decided to try and get the market to come to me."

In 1979, after selling a piece entitled End of an Era for the then-unheard-of price of $7,000, DeLoney quit his job at Fort Rucker and turned to his art full time—traveling the circuit, selling paintings out of his home, and marketing signed, limited-edition prints through advertising in agricultural trade publications and an effective direct mail campaign.

Ten years later, DeLoney's A Day at the Gin sold for $15,000, cementing his reputation as one of the South's foremost watercolorists. Shortly thereafter, he opened his Ozark gallery, and his dream of having the market come to him was realized.

"I'm astounded at the traffic that comes through the gallery," he says. "We used to have five or six people a week come by when I sold out of my studio at home. Now, with the gallery, we have 25 or 30 visitors a day passing through."

DeLoney spends much of his time these days managing his business interests, but still tries to paint between four to six hours per day. "Right now we're in a transition period, but I'm hoping that eventually I'll have more time to paint. Luckily for me, I'm not an artist who has to wait for a creative surge. I can start a drawing and get totally caught up in it in about 10 minutes. If I had to wait for inspiration all the time, I'd probably starve to death."

Working in his former studio/gallery, just down the road from his boyhood home, DeLoney paints roughly 30-40 works per year, of which four or five will be reproduced and released as signed and numbered prints. "I used to paint around 300 paintings per year when I was doing art shows all the time," he laments. "Now I'm lucky to do 40. But more time and effort goes into each."

DeLoney maintains an extensive collection of photographs of people and places, which he often turns to in order to get a structure, pose, or dress style just right. But he's quick to add that he doesn't really paint from photos. "I'm always on the lookout for material, and occasionally I pose a photo to get a certain, specific look. But I usually combine aspects from five or six photos in my work. I've never shot that perfect photo that was ready to go straight to the easel."

Along with photography, DeLoney has also found time to experiment with other art forms, such as etchings, and he is grimly determined not to be limited strictly to watercolors and rural subjects. "I don't want to be stereotyped as a barn painter," he declares. "I also like to do other things. It's not that Jack DeLoney has gone Hollywood, it's just that I like to be flexible."

Flexibility aside, there's little doubt that first and foremost, watercolors—and the rural South of yesterday—are and will forever remain DeLoney's first loves. "Nothing else excites me the same way," he says reverently. "Watercolors have a way of dictating their own course so that the artist really isn't in complete control of his own work. Because of that, there's an almost unexplainable magic to the medium that exists nowhere else."

"As for my subjects, the rural South will always be my favorite. It's important to me to paint what I know best and enjoy most. To have the public accept and buy it is just an extra blessing." AA

Golden Eagles Reunion '93 ...

More than 300 Auburn alumni and friends returned to campus Sept. 23-25 for the 1993 Golden Eagles Reunion, honoring the class of 1943. Some of the weekend's many activities included, clockwise from top, a reception at the President's home, swapping stories with old friends, sharing memories, and dancing to the music of the Auburn Knights.

... A Weekend to Remember

Golden Eagles participants also went on campus tours, visited their former colleges and schools, and generally picked up pretty much where they left off 50 years ago on the plains. They also found time to, clockwise from top, get up close and personal with War Eagle VI, dance the night away, look back through the years, and renew relationships.

Auburn's Conner Bros. Honored

Conner Bros., a third-generation construction company located in Auburn, was recently named the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' "Contractor of the Year" for the Savannah District and the South Atlantic Division, which includes the Southeastern U.S. and Central and South America.

The company's success was due in part to the work of four Auburn alumni—all of whom graduated from AU's Building Science Department. Executive Vice President Donald M. Conner '79, oversaw all management and customer interaction, while Larry Christopher '89 served as the project manager. In the field, Duell Colburn '88 supervised Conner's forces and subcontractors. Greg Kitley '86 handled quality control and safety.

The project, "The School of the Americas," was built at Fort Benning, Ga., and consisted of 26 buildings for a cost near $25 million. The project also won the Associated General Contractors' "Build Georgia Award" and the national Marvin M. Black Partnering Award.

Conner Bros. is in its 77th year of business, employs 10 Auburn graduates, and is completing AU's $10 million Life Sciences Building. Another AU connection is Donald Conner's service on Building Science's Industry Advisory Board.

Braly '79 Carries Classics to Atlanta

David Braly '79, an associate professor in Auburn's School of Architecture, sent his knowledge of classical art a little north of campus recently when he completed a special project for an Atlanta office building.

Visitors to NationsBank Tower in that city can view Braly's work—a giant mural showing classical themes of Greek and Roman architecture. He painted the mural, which measures 21 by 18 1/2 feet, in four panels on campus then shipped the project to Atlanta.

Peterson Chosen As Switzer Scholar

Jeffrey J. Peterson '84 was chosen as an honorary Switzer Scholar in Rehabilitation for 1993. Only 20 people nationwide were tapped for the June three-day think tank to discuss this year's topic, "Private Sector Rehabilitation: Practitioners, Trends and Issues."

The program was hosted by the President's Committee on Employment of People with Disabilities and was sponsored by the National Rehabilitation Association. Peterson is a vocational rehabilitation specialist and career counselor in Sulphur and Lake Charles, La. He also serves as the national and state president of the Vocational Evaluation and Work Adjustment Association.

Gully Provides Haven for Abused

Melissa McSwain Gully '86 has helped break the cycle of abuse in the lives of many children through her work with a group home. Gully is director of Sixty-Eighth Place, a group home for girls in Phoenix, Ariz. The program is sponsored by the Southwest Leadership foundation, a Phoenix-based social service organization.

The six teenagers live in the home with Gully, who is helped by other staff members. The children have all become wards of the state to escape abusive pasts. Gully describes Sixty-Eighth Place as a "residential, therapeutic home."

All staff teach basic living skills and counsel the children to deal with their abusive pasts. "We deal with trust issues, mostly," said Gully in an Arizona Republic interview. "It's really difficult for these kids to trust anybody. They've been betrayed by their parents as young children."

FarmHouse Boys Reunite at Sandoz

Sandoz Pharmaceuticals Corp. has put a new twist on headhunting. Or, rather, Todd Carroll '89, who went to work for Sandoz right after graduating from Auburn, has. It seems Todd is a one-man recruiting department, personally attracting four fellow AU alumni to sales positions with Sandoz.

However, the close ties don't end there. Not only are the four Auburn alumni; they are all FarmHouse Fraternity brothers. Todd, who works out of the Portland, Ore., office recruited big brother Curtis Carroll '86, Sandoz Columbia, S.C., sales rep; Jim Long '88, who works in Sandoz' Atlanta office; and Scott McClure '91, who sells Sandoz pharmaceuticals in Little Rock, Ark.

Sarah and Wes Savage '89

Savage Makes a Little Train Magic

When Wes Savage '89 lost his job due to a company takeover, he turned his energies to a new venture and an old love—model railroads. The son of former AU Board of Trustees member Morris Savage '59, Wes now operates the Moss Valley Railroad Company, a model railroading hobby shop located on the grounds of the historic Huntsville Depot.

Wes got his first toy train from his father as a boy, but the model train collecting turned serious when Wes was in high school and his grandfather, Ed Thompson, started the hobby with him. The family is also connected to the history of the railways via the fact that Morris Savage's father worked for the Frisco as a brakeman on a caboose.

Wes, with the help of his wife, Sarah Henderson '89, runs the Moss Valley Railroad Company out of an authentic railroad caboose. The company helps its customers get started on their own model railroad collection, specializing in custom-painted trains, hand-crafted layouts, and HO model trains.

MAKING WAVES

AUBURN SWIMMERS MOVING TO NEW HOME

BY ERIC PALM '95

EDITOR'S NOTE: Auburn swimming has long been synonymous with success, and this season, the Tigers will continue in a new $10.5 million pool. David Marsh '81, one of Auburn's greatest swimmers turned coach, recently talked to the Alumnews about the new facility, the upcoming season and the future of Auburn swimming.

Q: Auburn's new natatorium has been described as state-of-the-art. What does that mean?

A: State-of-the-art for swimming means that when the pool was built, the primary focus was to build the finest competitive tank possible. From what I have seen from pools around the world, including Barcelona this past summer, our pool should be the fastest in the world. There are some engineering features that our pool has that should make it even faster than those at the University of Texas or Indiana University at Purdue, which are considered the best two facilities in the U.S. We don't have the same size and seating capacity they have, but I'm talking about actual competitive tank, things like water depth, type of gutter system, bulk heads, all the types of things that make a fast pool. The whole goal is to minimize turbulence created by the swimmers.

Q: Will the new facility allow AU to host more SEC and NCAA events?

A: The pool is capable of hosting major national competitions. Our goal is to start with successful local meets with the Greater Auburn Swim Program, then we'll move on to host SEC meets and hopefully attract regional meets. Eventually, we'll bid on hosting nationals and junior nationals and major swimming and diving events. The natatorium is capable of hosting upwards of a thousand competitors on a given weekend, so we should be able to host a lot more meets.

John Asmuth '77, the new aquatics director, will be the one making the ultimate decisions of which meets we host. I'll be giving him input as to what I see as most appropriate. We'll go from hosting no meets in the community currently to having at least two or three major competitions per year.

Q: How has the new pool affected recruiting?

A: The new pool is definitely more of a positive than we've ever had before. When you look at the overall perspective of recruiting, it starts with a quality school. Swimmers are usually academic-oriented students in high school and are looking for a strong academic school. One of the problems we have with recruiting is that Auburn does not get out and sell what we have to the nation. The nation doesn't know how good an academic school Auburn is—we're one of the best-kept secrets. Beyond that, the atmosphere here with the people we've got is probably the biggest positive. The one negative we've always had is not having a pool. We've gone from having the worst pool in the conference and the worst pool of any top 20 NCAA team to one of the best. It already has had an impact on recruiting in a positive way.

Q: Have any foreign national teams looked at training here for the 1996

Olympics, which will be held in Atlanta?

A: We've had a couple of groups come looking. The latest was the U.S. delegation, which is considering using the whole city of Auburn as a preparation site for the Olympics. I've personally talked to the Australian and Japanese national teams about coming to look at Auburn, and Australia seemed very interested. They are looking for places not only for the Olympic year, but for a couple of years before to get used to the environment. One of the nice things about Auburn is that it's close to Atlanta, yet secluded enough in the college town atmosphere so that there aren't many distractions. I would imagine that we will have at least one country come train in Auburn.

Q: In recent years, the AU swim teams have enjoyed a lot of success. What's your outlook for this year?

A: More of the same I hope. I'm real proud of where we've come from. We have had three years of major transition in the program, which has involved everything from how the athletes behave, how they handle themselves in the community, and certainly their level of athleticism. To be honest, I'm not exactly sure if we're through the process yet. I'm excited about the momentum the program has built. It's not something I've had to create—the athletes have taken on the challenge and created a team chemistry within the program that is extremely positive that I don't think is duplicated anywhere else.

We are looking to compete for the conference championship this year, certainly on the men's side. We would like to think that our women would have a chance to catch Florida. At the national level, we certainly won't be satisfied with anything less than a top five finish in both the men and women.

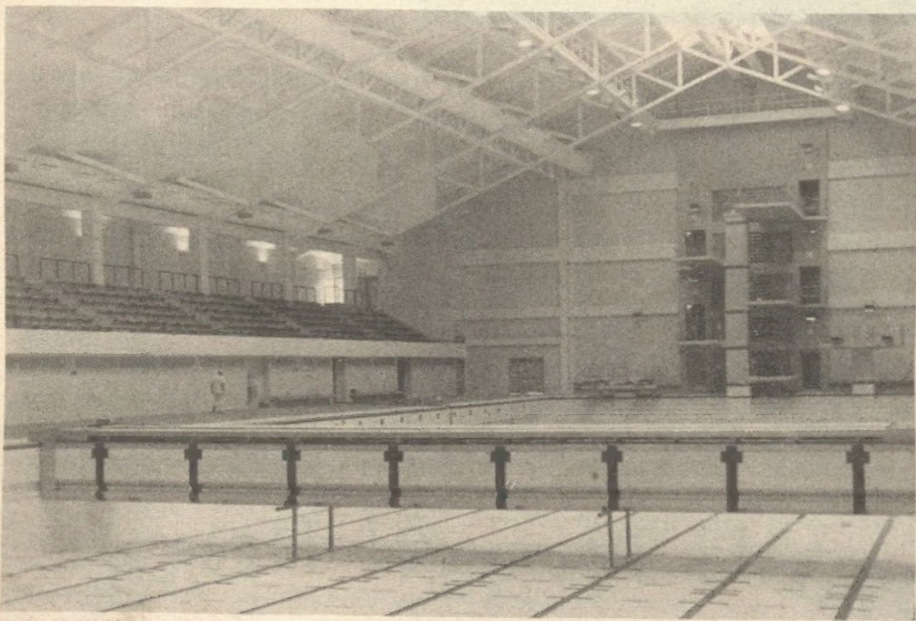

Q: Who are some of your main swimmers?

A: Unfortunately, it doesn't always work out this way, but our main swimmers, for the most part, are our seniors. They're the group that came under me my first year and have worked hard to improve over the three years they've been here.

We return seven senior All-Americans. Included on the men's side are Yoav Bruck, Greg Schmid, Dean Hutchinson, and Chris Younger. Chris and Yoav are probably the two most individually accomplished swimmers at an NCAA level. Both swam in the NCAA finals last year. On the women's side, Kristie Krueger is probably the leading swimmer on the team at this point. This past summer she won a gold medal at the World University Games and then went on to earn a spot at the Pan-Pacific Championships. She more than likely will have a tremendous race this year with Olympic gold medalist Jenny Thompson at the women's NCAA championships. Also, Christy Sax and Tanya Ross are two returning senior All-Americans from whom we are looking for a lot of leadership.

Q: Who are the Olympic hopefuls?

A: We have a lot of athletes that are hoping to make the Olympics. It's extremely competitive because there are only two spots open for each event. Lately, a lot of post-graduates have gone on competing beyond their collegiate years. I think we have three or four athletes on the team right now that could compete at that level. They include Iian Mull, Kevin Henricks, Ty Richardson and a real strong freshman class led by Scott Tucker.

SWIMMING ANYONE?—In addition to expanded seating, dressing areas, and other amenities, Auburn's new pools are designed to minimize turbulence, which slows swimmers down. As a result, meets in the AU Aquatic Center should boast some of the fastest times in the nation.

For the women—Kristie Krueger, Allison Bock, and Keri Reynolds are all good possibilities. Another strong candidate would be our post-graduate diver, Marina Smith, who finished as NCAA champion her senior year.

Q: What are some of the strengths and weaknesses of the team?

A: I think team chemistry is a key, and I have been very fortunate to have a very talented staff. As far as strokes go, men's sprint freestyle and women's back-, breast- and butterfly stroke.

As far as weaknesses go, we need to shore up our women's diving. It's tough when you lose an NCAA champion diver and have to rebuild. The men's backstroke depth is also somewhat weak.

Q: How does the SEC stack up nationally?

A: The SEC is definitely the fastest overall women's conference in the nation and the men compete very favorably with the PAC-10.

Q: What made you come back to Auburn to coach?

A: I love Auburn. That's as genuine as I can make it. It comes from the heart and mind. I was in Las Vegas for three years and obviously it was a dramatic change to leave

Las Vegas for Auburn, but the quality of people that are Auburn people—not only alumni, but also those in the community—make this a really special place.

Another thing is that I was a big part of Auburn swimming when we were very competitive and always ranked in the top five at the national level.

It was very disheartening to see the Auburn swimming program fall by the wayside and become the kind of program where you never saw Auburn swimming shirts around big national meets anymore. That is one of the things I use as my motivation to work hard so that at any national event you see Auburn represented. Not only that, but when an Auburn swimmer walks on the pool deck, I want them to garner a certain type of special respect. AA soon follow" because they don't want lawsuits either? Is "soon" the equivalent to that "relatively short time" of 21 years? Looking at a plan and actually implementing a plan are two different things.

I personally cannot believe all of this is still a battle 21 long years later. As a recipient of a partial swimming scholarship in 1976, the first year women received scholarship money, I experienced firsthand the inequalities in Auburn's Athletic Department. While a lot of ground has been covered since I was at Auburn, perhaps it would have been covered faster if a lawsuit had been filed 10 or 15 years ago and female graduates could have been offered better opportunities sooner.

I understand the argument that revenue-producing sports are what allow for non-revenue sports as the system is set up now. However, during my involvement I didn't see male swimmers being treated that much differently from male football players, but I did see female swimmers being treated very differently. Furthermore, just because that is the system now does not mean it cannot be changed.

Also, I thought it was interesting how numbers were used in the column. In my opinion, to say the budget for women's athletics now tops $2 million annually and to not print the men's budget (I'm guessing it's about $17 million by my interpretation of your use of numbers) is quite misleading without an equivalent reference point.

One thing we may agree on is that Auburn has made strides, satisfactorily or not, to comply.

Alum Prefers Old Tag

Dear Editor,

At the risk of sounding out of touch with reality, I feel compelled to comment on your cover story in the July-August 1993 issue, that of the "new" License to Learn Auburn University tags that went on sale October 1.

I, for one, find the "old" style, with the spire of beloved Samford Hall on the left margin to be more attractive than this latest logo. I have never cared that much for the "A" superimposed on the fat "U," anyway, certainly not enough to see it replace Samford Tower. This landmark lends a truly distinctive quality to the Auburn tags.

Of course, it is impossible for me to be objective, for I cannot separate the image of Samford Hall from my memories of it. My first encounter came at the age of eleven, when on the occasion of my brother's graduation, I caught a glimpse of the tower through the trees as we travelled north on College Street. I was so intrigued that my first request of my parents was to be allowed to walk through the big trees of the park to stand in front of the building and admire its simple beauty. Years later, as a high school junior, I came back to Auburn for Village Fair, and, again, I recall a visit to Samford Hall as a highlight of the trip.

Call it nostalgia, if you wish, but to this alum, Samford Tower is a symbol of what is unique about Auburn. Those old red bricks, in a single and unpretentious way, remind me that many, many people have been drawn to Auburn because it is different from other campuses. I hope that in giving up this symbolism for a modern art form we don't lose sight of what brought our great institution to where it is today. I believe it comes down to this: rather than a "win-at-all-costs" philosophy, Auburn people are successful because of their "serve-at-all-times" approach to life.

As for me, I intend to hang on to my old tag!

AU Alumni Band a Hit...

Auburn's seventh annual Alumni Band weekend was quite a hit this year, as more than 700 student and alumni band members combined at the Auburn-Samford game to form the largest AU Band ever. The Alumni Band took the field at halftime, playing a selection of hits from the band's earlier years, along with favorites such as "War Eagle," "Tiger Rag," and "Glory to Old Auburn."

Auburn-Bama Kickoff Changed...

The starting time for the 1993 Auburn-Alabama game, to be played this year at AU's Jordan-Hare Stadium, has been changed to 1 p.m. The game was originally scheduled for 2:30 p.m. to accommodate broadcast by ABC. Since the Tigers are serving a one-year television ban as part of NCAA sanctions against the football program, however, the game has been moved to AU's regular November game starting time.

Soccer Off on Right Foot...

AU's brand new women's soccer team, created as part of a settlement of a federal lawsuit brought against the university earlier this year, won the first game of its inaugural season 4-1 over Spring Hill College.

The suit, filed by 18 alumni and current students, accused AU of violating Title IX, which mandates equal college sports opportunities for women.

White Breaks Record...

In one of the finest games of his career to date, Auburn senior quarterback Stan White became the Tigers' new career passing leader in AU's 34-10 win over LSU. White surpassed the 6,284 yards passing recorded by his former mentor, Pat Sullivan, during the latter's playing days from 1969-1971. With eight games still to play at press time, White's total stood at 6,532 yards.

Fountainhead Water Helps AU...

Atlanta-based Fountainhead Water has been named the official water of AU and is contributing a portion of their sales to the AU scholarship fund. Fountainhead is contributing $1 for every five-gallon bottle sold and $1 for every case sold at participating retail outlets across the state.

Also, in conjunction with the program, Fountainhead is sponsoring a sweepstakes for chances to win trips to the Auburn-Alabama game in AU's Jordan-Hare Stadium Nov. 20. For additional information on the Fountainhead program, contact the company at 1-800-500-TIGER.

Get the Game Ball From AU-Ala. Match-up for $2

Would you or your group like to own the game ball from the 1993 Auburn-Alabama football match-up? Each $2 donation to Project AIM provides you with a chance at the November 20 game ball, which will be inscribed with the final score, dated, and signed.

All proceeds go to Project AIM, an early intervention program providing services to infants, toddlers, and preschoolers with developmental delays and/or disabilities and their families.

Send donations, with checks made payable to Project AIM, to Cheryl Lang, Project AIM, Department of Rehabilitation and Special Education, 1234 Haley Center, Auburn University, AL 36849-5226.

Collins Update

Last issue The Alumnews reported a request for financial help from the families of Paige Prator Collins '89 and her husband, Chuck Collins '89. Paige had Hodgkin's Disease and needed two costly bone marrow transplants. The family has since called with the sad news that Paige died August 23. Family members thank all those alumni who helped with contributions and/or prayers.

'42, '43 Gloms Sought by Alum

Dorothy McCarty '43 is looking for copies of the 1942 and 1943 Glomerata. If you have an extra copy of either year you are willing to part with, please write her at P.O. Box 61, Delaplane, VA 22025.

EE Hosts Open House on HC

On November 6 before the Homecoming game against New Mexico State, IEEE and Eta Kappa Nu will welcome alumni and their families to an open house in Broun Hall from 10 a.m. to Noon.

This will provide alumni with the opportunity to meet electrical engineering faculty and students and to tour the laboratory facilities. Refreshments will be served.

Directory Project Nears Completion

AU's Alumni Directory project is almost completed, with shipping due to begin the end of November.

The 1993-94 Alumni Directory compiles current data on more than 116,275 Auburn alumni. This information has been obtained from questionnaire mailings, telephoning research, and/or alumni records.

If you have a question about an order already placed or would like to place an order, please contact the publisher directly. You may write the company at: Customer Service Department, Bernard C. Harris Publishing Co., Inc., 3 Barker Ave., White Plains, NY 10601 or call (800) 877-6554.

Put Dancing Shoes On for AU Knights

The Auburn Knights Orchestra will host a ballroom dance with all your favorites from the Big Band era at the AU Hotel and Conference Center on Friday, November 19, from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m. Cost is $5 per person.

Attn. Atlanta Alums

All building science/construction alumni in the greater Atlanta area are invited to attend a reception on Thursday, November 18, at 6:30 p.m. The reception, which will include AU President William V. Muse as special guest, will be held at the Doubletree Hotel on the Concourse.

Football Videos, Programs on Sale

The Auburn Network is providing a video/program subscription service for those alumni who are unable to get a daily dose of Auburn football news.

Alumni can subscribe to the Auburn Football Review television show and receive a VHS tape each game week, featuring Coach Bowden's comments and game footage as hosted by Montgomery sports reporter Phil Snow.

Also available is a subscription to Auburn Football Illustrated, the official game program of AU football. Programs from all seven home games may be ordered for $42.

Videotapes of all 11 review shows may be ordered for $140. Or order both services for $170. (Alabama residents must add a seven percent sales tax.) Make checks payable to the Auburn Network at the following address: Auburn Network, P.O. Box 351, Auburn, AL 36831-0351.

SGA Offers 1994 Aubie Calendar

Auburn's Student Government Association is presently taking orders for the 1994 Aubie Calendar, the funds from which go into the Aubie Fund for the upkeep of our favorite tiger's suits.

Calendars may be ordered from the SGA for $5 each plus $1.50 for postage and handling. Make your $6.50 check or money order payable to AU Aubie Fund and mail to Aubie Calendar in care of the SGA, 332 Foy Union, Auburn University, AL 36849-5134.

Band's Hits Now Available on CD

The first compact disk by the AU Marching Band went on sale this fall, offering recordings of some of the band's most popular selections. The CD includes 18 songs played by the band during half-times of the 1992-93 football season.

The CDs sell for $15 each. Make checks payable to the AU Band and send to the attention of Marching Band Director Tim Kelley, AU Band, 132 Goodwin Hall, Auburn University, AL 36849.
